BOOKMARK

Fighting-game specialists EA Chicago will get their hands on the heroes of the Marvel Universe in an upcoming game.

Superheroes such as Spider-Man and Hulk could take part in the new game, scheduled for a 2008 release.

EA Chicago is responsible for fighting games including the "Fight Night" series and "Def Jam: Icon."

"We looked at past comic-based games to find out what was missing and what was needed to successfully translate the intensity, excitement and fiction from comics into fighting games," Kudo Tsunoda, general manager and

THE NEXT LEVEL

Katana brings arcade home

Personal arcade cabinet maker DreamAuthentics recently announced its first tabletop model, the Katana. For gamers that want to replicate the classic arcade experience, DreamAuthentics provides a customizable cabinet with a built-in PC.

The included PC has a custom PC-based game engine, a 17-inch flat-screen display and more than 200 licensed arcade games.

"The Katana personal video arcade is designed with price and space savings in mind," said Rick Barretto, president and chief executive officer of DreamAuthentics in a news release. "Many of our customers have been asking for a smaller product like this for years. The Katana allows any room to become a personal arcade and a digital jukebox."

The Katana can also play DVD movies and MP3 audio files. There's a hookup for cable or Internet access, and it is compatible with all PC-based games. The Katana can be connected to play console games, as well.

The Katana will retail for $2,495. For more information, go online to www.dreamauthentics.com.
