Arcade action goes home

Posted on: April 26, 2007

The DreamAuthentics Katana offers the authentic arcade experience via a true blue arcade machine, except that this cabinet comes in half the size, enabling you to enjoy those classics of yore on a desk rather than occupying enough space to place two water coolers. The Katana comes pre-loaded with more than 200 games ranging from the Atari 2600 to arcade classics. While the 17" display might not deliver a true arcade experience, at least you have more than enough buttons at your disposal for some old school gaming. The $2,500 price tag would be hard to justify to the missus though. Better use that money and buy a new computer, loading it with emulators instead. At least the computer can process spreadsheets and crunch numbers as well.
